SONGS AND STORIES
OF THE NETSILIK ESKIMOS

PARKROSE SUMNER SCHOOL
8678 N. E. SUMNER ST.
PORTLAND 20, OREGON
Man: A Course of Study
Developed by Education Development Center, Inc., under grants from the National Science Foundation.

First commercial edition 1970

SONGS AND STORIES
OF THE NETSILIK ESKIMOS

based on texts collected by KNUD RASMUSSEN
on the Fifth Thule Expedition, 1921-24

by EDWARD FIELD
CONTENTS

SONGS MY MOTHER TAUGHT ME 1
THE EARTH AND THE PEOPLE 3
MAGIC WORDS 5
DAY AND NIGHT AND HOW THEY CAME TO BE 6
THE THINGS IN THE SKY 7
SUN AND MOON 8
THUNDER AND LIGHTNING 11
HOW WE KNOW ABOUT ANIMALS 13
HISTORY OF THE TUNRIT 16
THE LAZY TUNRIT 18
MAGIC WORDS FOR HUNTING CARIBOU 21
ORPINGALIK TAUNTS HIS RIVAL IN SINGING AND HUNTING 22
THE FLY AND THE WATER BEETLE 23
THE RAVEN AND THE GULL HAVE A QUARREL 25
LAZY ESKIMO 26
MAGIC WORDS TO FEEL BETTER 27
TRAVEL SONG 28
SONGS MY MOTHER TAUGHT ME

I am just an ordinary woman who has never had visions.
But I will tell you what I can about this world I know and about the other worlds I do not know personally.
I don't even dream at night,
for if I could dream I would know more than I do.
People who dream
hear and see many important things. In sleep people can live a completely different life from real life.

I believe in dreams
but not being a dreamer myself
I only know what every child learns from his mother,
for mothers tell children stories at bedtime
to put them to sleep and it is from these stories
we learn about things.
I have never forgotten the old tales
I heard from my mother.
I have told them to my children and grandchildren,
and I will tell them to you.
The earth was here before the people.
The very first people came out of the ground.
Everything came from the ground,
even caribou.
Children once grew
out of the ground
just as flowers do.
Women out wandering
found them sprawling on the grass and took them home and nursed them.
That way people became numerous.

This land of ours
has become habitable
because we came here
and learned how to hunt game.
Even so, up here where we live life is one continuous fight for food and for clothing and a struggle against bad hunting and snow storms and sickness.
But we know our land is not the whole world.
MAGIC WORDS

In the very earliest time, when both people and animals lived on earth, a person could become an animal if he wanted to and an animal could become a human being. Sometimes they were people and sometimes animals and there was no difference. All spoke the same language. That was the time when words were like magic. The human mind had mysterious powers. A word spoken by chance might have strange consequences. It would suddenly come alive and what people wanted to happen could happen. Nobody could explain this: That's the way it was.
DAY AND NIGHT
AND HOW THEY CAME TO BE

In those times
when just saying a word
could make something happen,
there was no light on earth yet.
Everything was in darkness all the time;
people lived in darkness.

A fox and a hare had an argument,
each saying his magic word:
“Darkness,” said the fox,
for he wanted it to be dark so he could go hunting.

“Day,” said the hare,
for he wanted daylight
so he could find good grass to eat.

The hare won: His word was the more powerful
and he got his wish:
Day came, replacing night.
But the word of the fox was powerful too
and when day was over, night came,
and from then on they took turns with each other,
the nighttime of the fox
following the daytime of the hare.
THE THINGS IN THE SKY

The weather with its storms and snows
was once an orphan child who was so cruelly treated, as orphans often are,
that he went up into the sky to take revenge.
That's where the bad weather came from that ruins hunting and brings hunger.

The stars too are people who suddenly raised themselves from the earth and were fixed in the sky.
Some hunters were out chasing a bear
when they all rose up in the air and became a constellation of stars.
Every constellation has such a story.

The northern lights are a celestial ball game:
They flicker over the sky
like a ball being kicked around by players running on a field.

The rainbow is the shape of a great doorway,
opening, perhaps, to some world we still do not know.
But it is so far away
that no one has to be afraid of the lovely-colored light in the sky.
A brother and sister had been very wicked. They were so ashamed of themselves they decided to change into something else and start over in a new life.

The sister cried out of her unhappiness:
"Brother, what shall we turn into? Wolves?"

Her brother, not as anxious as she was to change, replied:
"Not wolves, sister, their teeth are so sharp."

"Brother, shall we be bears?" she asked desperately.
"Not bears, sister, they are too clumsy," he answered, hoping she would accept his excuse.

"Brother, what in the world shall we be? Musk oxen?"
"Not musk oxen, their horns are too sharp."

"Brother, shall we be seals then?"
"No, sister, they have sharp claws."

And in this way they discussed all the animals and the brother succeeded in vetoing all of them.

At last his sister moaned, "Brother, shall we become the Sun and the Moon?"
Her brother really could think of no objection to that, hard as he tried, so they each lighted a torch of moss from the fire and holding the flames high they ran out of their igloo.

They ran round and round it, the brother chasing his sister faster and faster, until they took off into the air. They rose and rose and kept on rising right up into the sky. But as they went, the sister put out her brother's torch because he had been reluctant.

And she with the lighted torch became the Sun and now warms the whole earth, but her brother, the Moon, is cold because his torch no longer burns.
Once in a time of hunger
the people were on the move
looking for better hunting.
Coming to a wide rushing river
the men made a ferry out of the kayaks
by tying them together with thongs
and brought the women and children across.

There were two orphans whom nobody would bother about:
In the hungry times people only had enough
for their own children.
So no one took them
and they were left behind on the shore.

They stood there, the little boy and little girl,
watching their people go off without them.
How would they live? They had nothing to eat and did not know how to take care of themselves.

They wandered back to the old campsite to look for something to eat.
The girl only found a piece of flint,
and the boy, an old leather boot sole.
The boy said to his sister,
"After the way we have been treated
I can't bear to be a human being any longer.
What can we turn into?"
"Caribou?" his sister suggested,
thinking of the warm herds and the moss to eat.
"No," he answered, "for then men would spear us to death."
"Seals?" she asked.
"No, for then they would tear us to pieces for food."

And in this way they named all the creatures
but there wasn't one that wasn't a victim of man.

Finally the sister proposed turning into thunder and lightning.
"That's it!" said her brother,
and they became airy spirits and rose into the sky,
the girl striking sparks with her flint and the boy banging his piece of leather like a drum making the heavens flash and thunder.

They soon revenged themselves
on the people who left them to starve.
They made so much thunder and lightning over their camp
that everyone died of fright.
And that way people discovered that thunder and lightning could be very dangerous indeed.
There was once an angatok
who turned himself into all the different kinds of animals to see what it was like to be them.

That happened long ago in the old times
when there was not much difference yet between an animal's soul and a human's
so to change from one creature into another was not too hard, if you knew how.
And this angatok knew the trick.

First he tried being a bear
but that was a tiring life, they walk about so much.
Even at night they keep roaming, the furry wanderers.

When he had enough of that, he became a seal:
They are always playing in the water
making the waves go to and fro.
Seals like sports
and turn themselves into people sometimes for fun
and shoot at targets of snow, like we do, with bows and arrows.

Then the angatok turned into a wolf
but that was a hard life and he nearly starved until another wolf showed him
how to get a good grip on the ground with his claws and run with the pack.
That way he learned how to keep up with the others and bring down caribou.

Then he became a musk ox:
How warm it was in the middle of the big lowing herds huddled together!
And after that he became a caribou, strange beasts, so timid that out of a sound sleep they would jump up and gallop away scared by a nothing.
How unpleasant to be a caribou!

That is how the angatok lived the lives of all the animals.
He learned their secrets and taught us all we know about them.
HISTORY OF THE TUNRIT

When our Netsilik forefathers came to these hunting grounds the Tunrit people already lived here. It was the Tunrit who first learned how to survive in this difficult country. They showed us the caribou crossing places and taught us the special way to fish in the rivers.

Our people came from inland so we love caribou hunting more than anything else, but the Tunrit were sea people and preferred to hunt seal. They actually went out on the salt sea in their kayaks, hunting seal in open water. That takes nerve. We only hunt them through the ice at breathing holes. They also caught whales and walruses as they swam by: The bones of these creatures are still lying around in the wrecks of the Tunrit houses. And they hunted bear and wore their skins for clothes. We wear caribou.

The Tunrit were strong, but easily frightened. In a fight they would rather run than kill. Anyway, you never heard of them killing anyone. And we lived among the Tunrit in those days peacefully, for they let us come and share their land: Until once by accident some of them killed one of our dogs and ran away scared, leaving their homeland.
All of the Tunrit fled finally from their villages here, although we cannot remember why anymore: They just ran away or the land was taken from them. And on parting from us they cried: “We followed the caribou and hunted them down; now it is your turn to follow them and do the hunting.”

And so we do to this day.
This is the story of the Tunrit man who was too lazy to hunt caribou.
(Tunrit, you know, prefer hunting seal.)
His job in the caribou hunt was to go out on the land and scare up animals down to the crossing place where the kayaks waited.
But this one was a tired Tunrit
and he lay down to rest
and spent the rest of the day resting.
He didn't want to admit he had done this so he rubbed his boot-soles against a rough stone.
And when he came home that night
he said, "What a day hunting caribou!"
and showed his worn-out soles
to prove how far he had gone.
So this way he used to rest all day and go home only at evening in time for dinner and sleep.
His wife was kept busy making him new soles.
"My man," she thought, "what a walker!"

But meanwhile few caribou were coming to the crossing place where the hunters waited and they decided to spy on him. They followed him and saw him lie down and rub his soles against a big white stone—lying down walking, he rubbed his soles to and fro until there were holes in them and when evening came they saw the walker limp home to his tent exhausted. So they found him out and named this stone The Sole-Wearer-Outer. That famous sole-wearing stone still exists in our land and is still used, they say, by some of our biggest walkers.
MAGIC WORDS
FOR HUNTING CARIBOU

You, you, caribou
yes you
long legs
yes you
long ears
you with the long neck hair—
From far off you're little as a louse:
Be my swan, fly to me, long horns waving great bull
cari-bou-bou-bou.

Put your footprints on this land,
this land I'm standing on,
so rich with the lichens you love.
See, I'm holding in my hand
the reindeer moss you're dreaming of—so delicious, yum, yum, yum—
Come, caribou, come.

Come on, move those bones,
move your leg bones back and forth
and give yourself to me.
I'm here,
I'm waiting
just for you
you, you, caribou.
APPEAR
COME HERE
ORPINGALIK TAUNTS HIS RIVAL
IN SINGING AND HUNTING

I know you, my friend. The way you talk one would think you never lost a race. Well, I dare you: The next time a caribou with a rack of great antlers swims across that lake over there and the weather is so cold the kayaks ice up making them really hard to paddle, let's chase it then, I mean let's just the two of us race with our wives watching from the shore: Who do you think will come in last?

I'll tell you who: Remember that time long ago when the two of us were young and the kayaks went like a pack of wolves after a caribou out on the big lake there? I clearly remember you couldn't paddle nearly fast enough but trailed well behind – behind ME, my friend. And you expect me to sing your praises now?
A fly and a water bug
were having a fight.
The fly razzed the bug,
"Beetle, you've got no guts or you'd answer me good."

And the beetle said,
"I may not have guts like you but just wait, I'll give you a sharp reply."
and making as fierce a face as he could the bug turned his back on the wise-guy fly.

But he didn't make the slightest attempt to answer him
for he was not good at thinking up answers.
THE RAVEN AND THE GULL
HAVE A QUARREL

RAVEN: You dirty-white slob of a gull,
what are you plumping yourself down here for?
You're no match for me
so better not start anything, big boy.

GULL: Who's trying to tell me what I can't do?
When the streams run free of ice in spring
who goes spear-fishing with his beak? ME!
That's something you can't do, short bill,
and never will.

RAVEN: Yes, but when it's freezing out
you have to stay home, crying from hunger.
You're pecking bones while I'm eating berries.
So what did you say I couldn't do?
LAZY ESKIMO

When I go out for caribou cow
I get myself a caribou cow.
But my friend, some hunter he is:
he's lazy as a dog. Big shot,
he's lying in the igloo dreaming of big game.

Friend, you'd better practice on caribou before you go out on the ice and face the claws and jaws of the white bear or the horns of the black musk ox charging you, poor you and your little spear.
MAGIC WORDS
TO FEEL BETTER

SEA GULL
who flaps his wings
over my head
in the blue air,
you GULL up there
dive down
come here
take me with you
in the air!

Wings flash by
in my mind’s eye
and I’m up there sailing
in the cool air,

a-a-a-a-a-ah,
in the air.
Leaving the white bear behind in his realm of sea ice
we set off for our winter hunting grounds on the inland bays.
This is the route we took:
First we made our way across dangerous Dead-man's Gulch
and then crossed High-in-the-sky Mountain.
Circling Crooked Lake
we followed the course of the river over the flatlands beyond where the sleds sank in deep snow up to the cross slats.
It was sweaty work, I tell you,
helping the dogs.

You think I even had a small fish or a piece of musk ox meat to chew on?
Don't make me laugh: I didn't have a shred on me.
The journey went on and on.
It was exhausting pushing the sled along the lakes around one island and over another, mushing, mushing.
When we passed the island called Big Pot
we spit at it
just to do something different for a change.
Then after Stony Island
we crossed over Water Sound at the narrows, touching on the two islands like crooked eyes
that we call, naturally, Cross-Eyed Islands,
and arrived at Seal Bay, where we camped,
and settled down to a winter season
of hunting at the breathing holes of the delicious small blubber beasts.

Such is our life,
the life of hunters
migrating with the season.
THE STORY OF NULIAJUK, MOTHER OF THE SEA, RULER OF ALL BEASTS, THE MOST DANGEROUS AND TERRIBLE OF ALL SPIRITS, TO WHOM NOTHING IS IMPOSSIBLE

In a time of famine once when the whole village was going off to new hunting grounds
a little orphan girl named Nuliajuk was left behind. Nobody could bother about an extra mouth to feed.
They were in a hurry
to get to a place where there was food.
They made a raft of the kayaks to cross the river on and the parents put their children on board.
Little Nuliajuk who had no one to take care of her jumped out on the raft as it left the shore
wanting to go too,
but the people threw her off into the water.

The little girl tried to hold on to the edge of the raft
but they cut her fingers off and as she went under the pieces of her fingers came alive in the water
and turned into seals:
That's where seals came from.

And Nuliajuk floated to the bottom
where she became Mother of the Sea and Ruler of All Beasts on sea and land.
There she lives in her house under the waters and keeps track of everything we do, and when we break taboos she punishes us by hiding the animals. Then hunting is bad and people starve. That is why she is the most feared of all the gods.

Nuliajuk gave seals to mankind, it is true, but she is not friendly to people for they had no pity on her when she lived on earth, throwing her into the sea like that to drown. So naturally she would like mankind to perish too. That is why we do our best to be as good as we can and make Nuliajuk think kindly of us.
MAGIC WORDS
FOR HUNTING SEAL

O sea goddess Nuliajuk,
when you were a little unwanted orphan girl
we let you drown.
You fell in the water
and when you hung onto the kayaks crying
we cut off your fingers.
So you sank into the sea
and your fingers turned into the innumerable seals.

You sweet orphan Nuliajuk,
I beg you now
bring me a gift,
not anything from the land
but a gift from the sea,
something that will make a nice soup.
Dare I say it right out?
I want a seal!

You dear little orphan,
creep out of the water
panting on this beautiful shore,
puh, puh, like this, puh, puh.
O welcome gift
in the shape of a seal!
This unpronounceable name
was the name of a man who could never catch a seal:
Net-ser su-it su-ar-suk.

When the men came home from hunting at the breathing holes and his wife saw her neighbor's husband drag a fat seal into the igloo next door and her own husband came in with nothing
she was furious.
So when he asked her for a drink of water
she wouldn't give him a drop.

Every day it was like this: He came home,
this hunter with permanent hard luck,
and asked his wife for a drink,
and every time she refused him.
What quarrels they had, until one day he said,
"I'm fed up. No water? No husband!"
And he went out for a walk and didn't come back.

When night came he arrived at a house
where three bears lived and when he told them his troubles
they kindly invited him to stay with them.
He did, until one day he found that he missed his wife and went home again.
The first thing he said when he came in the door was
"Am I thirsty! How about a drink?"
His wife answered as usual,
"Still no seal? Then no water for Net-ser su-it su-ar-suk!"

At this, he stared hard at the bearskin on the sleeping platform sending a mental message to the bears for help.
Right away the snow outside began to crunch
with heavy footfalls of a bear:
It was a new helping spirit that his friends had sent,
and a great paw smashed the ice-window of the igloo.
The wife immediately understood that things had changed and cried, "Here is water, darling Net-ser su-it su-ar-suk!"
And the bear vanished.

From then on, Net-ser su-it su-ar-suk
had a good little willing wife who did everything he wanted:
He only had to glance at the bearskin to make her jump!
And even his luck at the breathing holes changed –
now he caught many seals and was known as
The Mighty Hunter Net-ser su-it su-ar-suk!
THE GIANT BEAR

There once lived a giant bear who followed people for his prey. He was so big that he swallowed them whole: They smothered to death inside of him if they hadn't already died of fright.

Either the bear attacked them on the run, or if they crawled into a cave where he could not squeeze his great body in, he stabbed them with his whiskers like toothpicks, drawing them out one by one, and gulped them down.

No one knew what to do until an angatok went out and let the bear swallow him, sliding right down his throat into the enormous stomach. And once inside there, he took his knife and simply cut him open, killing him of course.

He carved a door in the bear's belly and threw out those who had been eaten before, and then he stepped out himself and went home to get help with the butchering. Everyone lived on the bear meat for a long time. That's the way it goes: Monster one minute, food the next.
A PEEK INTO AN OWL'S HOUSE,
OR JUST LIKE HUMANS

BIG POPPA OWL: Our two sons ought to be back soon from hunting. Keep a look out, Momma, and see if they come back with anything.

BIG MOMMA OWL: There they come, our darlings, each dragging a marmot!

BIG POPPA OWL: Yum, yum, I can't wait. I'll go help them. I'd better hitch up the sled. Where's the dog harness?

BIG MOMMA OWL: Over by the door, but I'm afraid the breast strap is still broken. I meant to mend it but just plain forgot.

BIG POPPA OWL: (hollering) What do you mean forgot? You didn't have a thing to do all day.

BIG MOMMA OWL: (crying) But the baby was so cranky today, he took up all my time.

They were really going at it by the time the two sons came home each dragging a marmot and found their parents squabbling, the baby crying and the pot boiling over.
A woman once refused to get married and turned down every man who proposed to her, so finally one of them said: "You've got a heart of stone and I hope you turn into stone!" And before she could answer with her famous sharp tongue his words began to come true and she could no longer move from the spot where she was standing by the lake. She was really turning into stone from the legs up. Desperately she called to some kayaks paddling by: "Kayaks, please come here boys, I'm ready to get married now." (Now she was willing to marry not just one but as many as she could get!) But the men wouldn't come near her having been rejected by her too often. She clapped her hands and sang her song: "Kayaks everywhere, please come here, I'll take you all as husbands now. Men, have pity on me before my precious hands have turned to stone." But then her hands turned to stone, stone was her tongue, and her song was done.
That stone is still there by the lake shore. It doesn't look like a person anymore. Hardly any of it shows now because people have heaped it over with small white stones as offerings to her spirit. For it is said that since turning to stone she likes to have possessions of stone, and people think that if they give her what she wants she will give them good hunting.
The Owl saw the Plover crying and asked, "Why are you crying, my pretty bird?"

"My husband, my poor husband," the Plover sobbed. "A man caught him in a snare, and I have lost him."

"Well," said the Owl, "Then why don't you take me, handsome me, for your next husband, with my bushy eyebrows and long beard, my plump feathers and lofty forehead?"

"Huh," said the Plover, "who would have you, I wonder, even with your plump feathers and long beard, your lofty forehead and bushy eyebrows? Look at you, you have no neck and stubby legs!"

The Owl hollered back, "You dirty bird, so you won't have me for a husband? Then I hope you end up a tidbit between someone's teeth!"
OLD KIGTAK

One bad winter when everyone was weak with hunger and the village decided to move to new hunting grounds, Arfek had to leave behind his old mother-in-law Kigtak to crawl over the ice and catch up if she could.

It was a pitiful sight and we did not laugh for it probably meant death for her:
The old lady was half-blind and crippled and she was not wearing warm enough clothes for the weather but as long as she could crawl she followed:
Life was still sweet to her.

No one here among us wishes harm to old people for we ourselves might live to be old some day, but Arfek had no choice but to leave Old Kigtak behind.

He couldn’t let her ride on the sledge, for he had only two dogs, and as it was he and his wife had to help drag the sledge, weak as they were.

He couldn’t go back to get her after they camped because that would mean spending the night traveling back and forth when he had to be at the breathing holes early next morning to hunt for food.

He could not allow his wife and children to starve: He had to think of them first for they had their lives ahead of them, rather than help an old worn-out woman who was at death’s door anyway.
We have a custom that old people who cannot work anymore should help death to take them. Old Kigtak thought of this, left behind, all alone on the ice. She knew she was useless and couldn’t work anymore, so why hang on as a burden to her children?

You see, it is not that we have hard hearts but that the conditions of life here are merciless and to survive in a land of ice and snow sometimes we must be without pity.
An old woman had a dog she named Anningat after her daughter who was living far away in another village.
Everybody laughed.
How can you name a dog after your daughter? they asked.

Okay, laugh, she answered, but every time I feed my dog I make believe I am feeding my darling daughter, for how do I know she isn't hungry far away from her momma?
This way I feel like I am feeding her every day. And when I call my dog by my daughter's name it's just as if my daughter whom I love is near. If I always keep my dog Anningat with me, name will call to name and Anningat, my daughter, will often come to visit.
Grandma turned a little odd in spring:
She took a caterpillar in and mothered it.
She put it down her sleeve
while she went about her work,
letting it suck like a baby on her skin,
and soon it grew so big and fat and happy
it said, Jeetsee-jeetsee.

Her grandchildren saw this and were disgusted—
after all, a caterpillar!
So when grandma went behind the tent
they threw it to the sled-dogs who gobbled the juicy tidbit.

And when grandma came back in she called, My darling? My own one?
Why don’t I hear the song that made my old heart young again?
Where is my dear one that went Jeetsee?
Are you gone?
And she sat down crying by the fire alone.
THE INVISIBLE MEN

There is a tribe of invisible men who move around us like shadows – have you felt them?
They have bodies like ours and live just like us,
using the same kind of weapons and tools.
You can see their tracks in the snow sometimes and even their igloos
but never the invisible men themselves.
They cannot be seen except when they die
for then they become visible.

It once happened that a human woman married one of the invisible men.
He was a good husband in every way:
He went out hunting and brought her food,
and they could talk together like any other couple.
But the wife could not bear the thought that she did not know what the man she married looked like.
One day when they were both at home
she was so overcome with curiosity to see him that she stabbed with a knife where she knew he was sitting.
And her desire was fulfilled:
Before her eyes a handsome young man fell to the floor.
But he was cold and dead, and too late
she realized what she had done,
and sobbed her heart out.
When the invisible men heard about this murder they came out of their igloos to take revenge. Their bows were seen moving through the air and the bow strings stretching as they aimed their arrows. The humans stood there helplessly for they had no idea what to do or how to fight because they could not see their assailants. But the invisible men had a code of honor that forbade them to attack opponents who could not defend themselves, so they did not let their arrows fly, and nothing happened; there was no battle after all and everyone went back to their ordinary lives.
THE EVIL SPIRIT
AND THE BEARDED SEAL

Some children were playing and laughing as they do, when an evil spirit got sick of hearing them so happy and grabbed a live bearded seal for a whip to beat them with and went after them.

When they saw him with that big weapon in his hand and heard his awful threats they climbed up on a tall snow-block used for stretching skins where he could not get them.

Foiled, he got madder than ever and decided to break into an igloo
used by several families,
and he crawled in through the long low entrance passage pushing his seal before him.

Right inside the inner door-flap
there were people boiling blubber and when the spirit's horrible face came into view they poured the pot of boiling oil right over him, scalding him to death.
The seal that he used to beat people with was flopping around on the floor
so they made short work of him too:
They put him out of his misery fast with a knife,
and into the blubber pot with him and that was that!
TOTANGUAK,
SPIRIT OF STRING FIGURES

One night when everyone was sleeping
a child lay awake making string figures to amuse himself and a stranger appeared before him out of the night.

"I dare you," he said to the child,
"let us see who can make string figures faster.
I set the rules: We will make three of them,
the first two you may choose,
and if you win those you may also choose the last one.
But if I win the first two then I get to choose the last."

The foolish child agreed to this for he was very proud of his skill at string figures,
and for the first test chose The Spouting Whale,
but as fast as his fingers went, the stranger was faster and finished before him.

Then he proposed Man Carrying Kayak for the second race,
his best string figure,
and he was astonished to see the stranger's fingers
fly like the wind and beat him again.

"So," said the stranger with a frightening hiss,
"you have lost the first two.
Now it is my turn to choose the last,
and I propose the string figure of Totanguak!"
Then the child knew who this strange opponent was, none other than Totanguak himself, Spirit of String Figures, and if he lost this final race he would be carried off and never see his people again.

They started the last match and the child simply stopped and watched the gruesome sight as Totanguak running out of string used his own intestines to create the complicated figure.

Totanguak gave a cry of triumph as he finished and the child knew he was doomed - Totanguak would get him now! But at that moment his father on the sleeping platform near him woke up and raised his head and Totanguak vanished into the air with a hiss!

That is why children are forbidden to play at string figures by themselves at night.
A LESSON IN SHARING

A lame man asked Kaluarsuk to move in with him and be his hunting mate. This lame man wasn't able to walk but he was good at paddling a kayak so Kaluarsuk teamed up with him and during the caribou season they shared the meat.

But when winter came, Kaluarsuk figured that the lame one was not good for much when it came to hunting at the breathing holes. He couldn’t get there over the ice with his bad legs, could he? So when Kaluarsuk went out and caught seal he did not share any with his lame friend at home and never gave him a bite to eat.

Two brothers next door saw the poor cripple dying of hunger and took pity on him and brought him into their house telling their wives to feed him dried salmon to revive him. And when the lame man was no longer weak from hunger they took him with them to the breathing holes by driving him there on a sled and he turned out to be a good shot with a harpoon. In fact he caught seals right away which he shared with his old sharing partner, Kaluarsuk, who had come along.
Kaluarsuk who had caught nothing himself that day took his share of seal and said, "How good to have sharing partners."
The two brothers spoke right up:
"You like having sharing partners now?
Then why didn't you think of your sharing partner when you were the one catching seals!"
ORPINGALIK'S SONG:
IN A TIME OF SICKNESS

My biggest worry is this:
that the whole winter
I have been sick and helpless as a child.
   Poor me.

As long as I'm in this sorry condition
I really think it would be better
if my wife left me
for I'm not much of a husband anymore.
I should be taking care of her and getting food.
What good am I
now that I can't get up on my two feet?

Have you forgotten what a man you were? I ask myself.
Try to remember the beasts you hunted.
Remember and be strong again.

Yes, I remember once coming on a great white bear who thought he alone was a fighter.
What a battle we had!
He came straight at me across the ice
rising high on his hind legs.
We grappled, and again and again
he threw me down,
but I didn't let go until he was dead.
When the bear came out of the water that day and lay down calmly on the ice
he thought he was the only male around but I came along and showed him!
I also remember a seal I once got in a time when we were all weak with hunger.
Everyone was still asleep
when I went out on the ice that morning and luckily found the breathing hole of a seal.
That blubbery beast was in there all right about to come up for a breath of air
but he heard me, the sly one,
and waited to one side under the thick ice
where I could not spear him through the hole.
But just as I was ready to give up
he made a false move and I got my harpoon into him, and we had his blubber and blood for breakfast that day!

Now with me sick
there is no blubber in the house
to fill the lamp with.
Spring has come
and the good days for hunting
are passing, one by one.
When shall I get well?
My wife has to go begging
skins for clothes and meat to eat that I can’t provide.
O when shall I be well again?
I can't understand it:
I was once a hunter
but now I've come to this.

I remember a fat caribou cow
swimming out in the open water,
and I went after her in my kayak
hardly believing I could ever catch up.
I chased hard
- I almost feel strong again remembering it - and other kayaks were chasing too thinking they would get the caribou first.
They were already shouting cries of victory
but I put everything I had into my paddle,
- O I remember now how it feels to be a real man again -
and I won the race:
It was my caribou, all mine,
and the others got nothing at all!
HUNGER

You, stranger, who only see us happy and free of care, if you knew the horrors we often have to live through you would understand our love of eating and singing and dancing. There is not one among us who has not lived through a winter of bad hunting when many people starved to death. We are never surprised to hear that someone has died of starvation - we are used to it. And they are not to blame: Sickness comes, or bad weather ruins hunting, as when a blizzard of snow hides the breathing holes.

I once saw a wise old man hang himself because he was starving to death and preferred to die in his own way. But before he died he filled his mouth with seal bones, for that way he was sure to get plenty of meat in the land of the dead.

Once during the winter famine a woman gave birth to a child while people lay round about her dying of hunger. What could the baby want with life here on earth? And how could it live when its mother herself was dried up with starvation? So she put it out and let it freeze. Then a seal was caught and the famine was over, so the mother survived.
That is what may happen to people. We have gone through it ourselves and know what one may come to, so we do not judge them. And how should one who has eaten his fill and is well be able to understand the madness of hunger? We only know that we all want so much to live!
HEAVEN AND HELL

And when we die at last,
we really know very little about what happens then.
But people who dream
have often seen the dead appear to them
just as they were in life.
Therefore we believe life does not end here on earth.

We have heard of three places where men go after death:
There is the Land of the Sky, a good place
where there is no sorrow and fear.
There have been angatoks who went there and came back to tell us about it:
They saw people playing ball, happy people who did nothing but laugh and amuse themselves.
What we see from down here in the form of stars are the lighted windows of the villages of the dead
in the Land of the Sky.

Then there are two other worlds of the dead underground:
Way deep down is a place just like here on earth except on earth you starve and down there they live in plenty.
The caribou graze in great herds
and there are endless plains
with juicy berries that are nice to eat.
Down there too, everything is happiness and fun for the dead.
But there is another place, the Land of the Miserable, right under the surface of the earth we walk on. There go all the lazy men who were poor hunters, and all women who refused to be tattooed not caring to suffer a little to become beautiful. They had no life in them when they lived so now after death they must squat on their haunches with hanging heads, bad-tempered and silent, and live in hunger and idleness because they wasted their lives. Only when a butterfly comes flying by do they lift their heads (as young birds open pink mouths uselessly after a gnat) and when they snap at it, a puff of dust comes out of their dry throats.

Of course it may be that all I have been telling you is wrong for you cannot be certain about what you cannot see. But these are the stories that our people tell.